Natalie Jamison is a native to the Washington DC metro area. She studied environmental studies at American University and proceeded to join the Bureau of Indian Affairs Native American Water Corps and work with the Chesapeake Bay Field office of US Fish and Wildlife in toxicology. An active member of her community Natalie is on the Board of Directors for the Kiwanis Club of Tyson's Corner. This passion to serve both a community and the environment made the Community Volunteer Ambassador position a natural fit. In her spare time she enjoys a good cup of tea and a book, teaching her cat and lizard to walk on leashes, running a blog about
