

Kathryn Tyler grew up in western Massachusetts in the town of Hadley. She earned her undergraduate degree from Mount Holyoke College majoring in Environmental Studies and minoring in Mathematics. Throughout college, Kathryn was engaged with the environment from leading a zero waste club to working with a land conservation non-profit. Since graduation, she has been in Colorado working as an interpretive ranger intern for Rocky Mountain National Park and also volunteering her time at Colorado Springs Food Rescue. She is excited to be in D.C. channeling her enthusiasm for the environment into working on community engagement within public lands.
