

NEW BEDFORD WHALING NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK (MA)

Birthed in Haiti, Carter Remy is now a graduate from Bridgewater State University, MA with a B.A. in Cultural Anthropology and two minors—one in Recreation and another in Latin American and Caribbean Studies. Carter prides on advocating for the youth and young adults, especially underrepresented, underprivileged, and underserved youth and immigrant families. This passion led Carter to an internship with the New Bedford Whaling National Historical Park where he sought to understand the role of New Bedford's National Historical Park in the development of New Bedford youth's culture. That internship swiftly cemented his love in continuing working with New Bedford Whaling National Historical Park to advocate and be a bridge for the youth, for he quickly learned that New Bedford is a town rich in culture and history. Carter is looking forward to using his skills and knowledge to strengthen the park's connections with the youth in the community.
