

POINT REYES NATIONAL SEASHORE (CA)

May was born and raised in the city of San Francisco where she developed her life-long love for beaches, plants and coastal fog! She has fond memories of adventuring to city and national parks with her family as a child but it was in high school that she discovered her passion for the environment and conservation through recycling! Then she began working in educational museum and tourism settings in San Francisco where her relationship with interpretation blossomed. At SF State she obtained a B.S. in Recreation, Parks, and Tourism Administration in which she had the opportunity to participate in a service-learning trip to Costa Rica engaging with local communities in their National Parks and tribal territory. After taking a break from the nonprofit world, she found herself continuing to pursue her initial passions at Point Reyes National Seashore as a seasonal Park Guide. May is ecstatic to be back at the only national seashore on the Pacific West coast to continue engaging with the local community, youth and inclusion in the outdoors and volunteerism world. You can find her on any of the 150+ miles of trails throughout Point Reyes appreciating its beauty and history from all angles!
